

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This book would not have been possible without the research and editing talents of Sam Edmondson, a great scholar and friend; my many colleagues who gave expert advice and guidance, including Earth Duarte-Trattner, Michael Balliro, Austin Bunn, Rebecca Solnit, Dahr Jamail, and Stephen Kretzmann; the invaluable information provided by my colleagues at the Institute for Policy Studies—Phyllis Bennis, Erik Leaver, Sara Anderson, and John Cavanagh; the International Forum on Globalization; the dozens of people around the world who were willing to speak with me and have their stories told in this book, especially Marine Corporal Sean O’Neill; Naomi Klein for her groundbreaking work; Diana Finch, far more than an agent—an editor and guide; Greg Palast, not only for his tireless work exposing the reality behind the lies of, well, just about everything, but for connecting Diana and me; the great team at ReganBooks/HarperCollins, particularly my editors Cal Morgan and Anna Bliss, as well as Noelle Murrain, Chase Bodine, Gary Reznik, and Elizabeth Yarborough. Finally, all of my friends at the Morning Due Café who gave me a home away from home; and the Lucky 13—you know why.